MONTREAL 101.

You are, of course, aware of the discussions and correspondence I have had with Dr. Nisbet about surfactants and that it appeared to reach a reasonably satisfactory stage where what needed doing emerged clearly. Anyway, I expressed some views in my letter of March 23th, which led up to my query whether you would wish to start some work in Montreal along the lines I sketched out. I know how worrisome these matters are to organize but I would like to know if you are making any progress. I cannot be sure that I would have great success over here but if you have not actually got a project warming up I would certainly like to try my hand. On the other hand, one project is enough and we shall be only too happy to leave this to you if you think your prospects are good.
