Dear Bob,

When I left Montreal I felt we had discussed fully during the previous few days the topic of the future of the ITPL Biology Group.

The progress made, particularly on the final day, was good and I hope you think it was all worthwhile. There are lots of details to be worked out, and I had the uncomfortable feeling of leaving the game just as it was getting under way. If there is anything I can do to help, please let me know.

I do apologise for not having written to you sooner, and hope that this has not caused any delay. I did agree to try to summarise the rationale behind the proposed programme for the Biology Group, and would still be pleased to do this if you feel it would be helpful to you at this stage.

This is my second day back in the office, and, as yet, I have not had time to discuss, in detail, the meeting in Montreal.

Next week several of us will be involved fairly fully with the inhalation toxicology meeting being held here, so it could be towards the end of the month before any official comment reaches you concerning the outline proposals which we formulated during my visit.

I look forward to hearing of any progress which you may have made.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely,

RS
